Walton, in Laboratory of Pa. State Zoologist. The Painted Turtle has the carapace ovate, depressed, without keel, smooth, margin flaring slightly, never serrated posteriorly and but slightly notched. Plastron immovable. Alveolar surface of jaw narrow, well marked except in front; upper jaw notched in front. Olive or greenish black, plates margined with paler, opposite, slightly imbricated; marginal plates marked with bright red; plastron yellow, often blotched with brown. Length of shell occasionally six inches. This is one of the common turtles seen in ponds, ditches, and shallow streams, in rows ou stones, logs and banks, and which upon the slighest alarm slide into the water and hide in mud, swim away, or stir up the mud and thus cloud the water so as to be concealed. Holbrook says of the Painted Turtle that it frequents ditches, ponds and pools, is abundant in rivers where the water is sluggish; spends almost the whole day basking in the sun on the banks of rivers, or on fallen trees or logs. Is very timid and escapes rapidly when disturbed. Hibernates early and is first to be seen in the spring. It takes the angler s hook readily. Its flesh is sometimes eaten but not much esteemed. It hibernates in the deeper water of quiet ponds, especially where there is an accumulation of submerged leaves. In seining for fishes in the fall of the year, we have frequently caught the net...
