Daniel Clark, of New Hampshire, Delivered in the Senate of the United States, February 20, 1860 That is not my object. I do it for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to what I call the modern history of slavery agitation in this country, going back for the last ten years, and for the purpose of correcting what I think is an erroneous impression, that the Northern people, and especially the Republican party, are responsible for the agitation of the slavery question in Congress. I ask the attention of the Senate and of Senators to the position of affairs now, and to the progress of affairs since 1850, the time when the compromise measures were introduced into Congress. At that time Mr. Webster said, in a speech which he made on the 7th of March, 1850, that the question of slavery was settled in every foot of the territory that then belonged to the United States. This is his language: And I now say, sir, as the proposition upon which I stand this day, and upon the truth and firmness of which I intend to act until it is overthrown, that there is not, at this moment, within the United States, or any Territory of the United States, a single foot of land, the character of which, in regard to its being free-soil territory or slave territory, is not fixed by some law, and some irrepealable law, beyond the power of the action of this Government. - Congressional Globe, Thirty-first Congress, first session, part I, vol. 21, p. 479. To this...
